

Germany Danzig

The city of Danzig has alternated between Polish and German control since its founding in 1225. As a port city, Danzig early became an important part of the Hanseatic League. Later the city became a semi-autonomous Polish state. In 1793 Danzig was annexed to Prussia and became the capital of West Prussia province.

Following the defeat of Germany in World War I, Danzig was made the Free City of Danzig. The Treaty of Versailles placed Danzig under the protection of the League of Nations and provided special port privileges to Poland. Friction between the German citizens of Danzig and the Polish government grew daily. In 1934 Nazi supporters won control of the Danzig government on a platform of termination of the special privileges. The question was forceably resolved on September 1, 1939 when the German army invaded Poland and World War II began.

Danzig became the Polish port city of Gdańsk under terms of the Potsdam Agreement.
